Leah Guadagnoli's "Soft Violence" at Asya Geisberg Gallery

I have been a fan of Brooklyn-based Leah Guadagnoli since I saw her colorful-geometric sculptures at 247365 Gallery in 2016. There is a gaudiness about them I've always loved. Plush and playful combined with a smart design aesthetic, Leah expertly executes shaped canvases with materials such as pumice stone and insulation board. I'm so excited that this new body of work is even further refined with crisp edges and saturated hues (while still retaining its "Saved by the Bell" vibe).
